WHO TAKE

Beecham's Pills are strongly of opinion that no better medicine has been compounded for the relief of the common allments of the digestrie system. It is well known that dyspeptic troubles are the cause of many bodily ills and much depression of spirits. Beecham's Pills, by their tonic and cleansing effects upon the stimuch, liver and bowels, promote the efficiency and healthy action of those important organs. Hence the great improvement is general health invariably experienced by those who take

A Sound Investment

That gives an immediate, consistent and continuous return while still retaining its capital value. The will last a lifetime. It is Hygienic because the ventilation is perfect. It is ideally comfortable because the Vi-Spring System ensures uniformity over its entire surface—it can't sag anywhere. If a greater weight is applied to any point it meets with an increasing support. Consequently, one experiences the feeling of floating over a delightfully resilient surface which cannot impede the circulation of the blood by undue pressure on any of the muscles.

To those who appreciate the importance to health of sound, refreshing sleep we suggest an early investigation of the Vi-Spring Mattress at our Showrooms, or writing for full particulars, which will be sent post free on request.

CALEDON Industrial Motor Vehicles

THE triumphant form of the Caledon when the load is full and the going hard is the delight of every user.

Here is no mere plodder of respectable merits, but a machine which gets to work with zest. The brilliant qualities of the Caledon chassis make motor traction convincingly profitable. When you get a Caledon you get the best.

On Wednesday a number of the men attended, without the Chief Commissioner's leave, a meeting of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and were enrolled as members of that Society. Another meeting was amounced for the following day, and the Chief Commissioner issued an order, which was read at every police station in Dublin, to the effect that members of the Force who should attend this meeting would "render themselves liable to serious consequences." In spite of this warning another large batch of constables attended the second meeting, and, it is meeting would "render themselves liable to serious consequences." In spite of this warning another large batch of constables attended the second meeting, and, it is said, became members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. All such men have committed two offences against their salt. In the first place, they have disobeyed wilfully the order of their commanding officer. In the next place, they have broken the essential condition of their service which forbids them to "join or belong to any political rocety whatsoever, or any secret society whatsoever, unless the Society of Freemasons." The men argue we are tald, that the Ancient Order

Buring Mr. Birrell's Chief Secretaryship the administration of the law reached, we may hope, its nadir in Ireland. The impartial fulfilment of duty by public servants is usually unpopular in this country. In Ireland, therefore, to a greater extent, perhaps, than any other civilised country, it is necessary that officials shall be always confident of the support of the Executive Government so long as they do their duty without fear or favour. Under the Birrell régime such officials were sacrificed consistently to the clamour of the politicians. This practice had two lamentable results. Honest servants of the State began to feel that they could only earn their salaries under constant fear of reprimand or dismissal. They fell into a state of apathy and carelesaness when they found that their reports and warnings to the Exscutive Government were either mistrepresented or ignored. The other, and consequent, result was that the public belief in the efficacy of political pressure was exalted to the cogency of a creed. Men felt that, if they broke the law, outraged discipline, or disregarded authority, there quickly with a piece of Mr. Birrell's legacy

—a conflict between the interests of honest administration and the pressure of political intrigue. It is a test case, and Mr.

belief in the efficacy of political pressure was exalted to the cogency of a creed. Men felt that, if they broke the law, outraged discipline, or disregarded authority, there was at least a sporting chance that they would beat the law, and that discipline would be compelled to apologise to them. This fatal process culminated in the dismissal of Mr. Harrel. To every thinking Irishman there must be a clear relation of cause and effect between that incident and the present trouble in the Metropolitan Police. A new Chief Secretary and a new Under-Secretary have just taken office in Ireland. They have been confronted to the content of the protection of the present trouble in the Metropolitan Police. A new Chief Secretary and a new Under-Secretary have just taken office in Ireland. They have been confronted to the actress of their fancy. in dolls, it secured some large orders for the Colonies (their dolls being much lighter for export than the china-headed English ones), and was preparing to register as a private company when the rebellion upset all arrangements. The Irish Toy Company, of Belfast, which makes very elever inter-locking bricks, has also become firmly established, and is doing a big trade, and the wooden toy industry of Water-ford is now selling large quantities. The new Committee for the development of toy-making hopes to use these factories as a nucleus for a very large system of toy-making all over Ireland, in which our disabled solders can be employed. We hope to see toy-making taught is every school as hand-work, so that the exceptionally clever fingers of our children may be trained, and that within the next few years every village in Ireland may have its, own better than, the foreign, but they cannot be as cheap. I would particularly caution buyers of cuddley toys "to make sure of the atuffing, as most foreign toys, and, alas! many British, as most foreign toys, and, alas! many British, are stuffed with the sweepings of barbers' shops. The Sanitary Inspecter of Cawapore told me that the hair-abavings of the pilgrims who came there every year were all bought by Germany for stuffing dolls, and that on cose occasion when the British Raj ordered a compound of hair to be burned, as there was plague is the district, the priests claimed compensation.

Quite a thriving little industry has been started in several parts of Ireland in most gathering for stuffing. The Sisters of Charity in Gardiner street, Dublin, made dolls before the war, and are continuing to make excellent yag babies. The Ballycastle wooden toy industry has received a new impetus. Cock has started a toy industry, but I have ne inferrmation at hand. The Board of Works got agme quite excellent wooden toys made in Mays, and a priest in Galway sent some first-cleas samples made by his boys' class. Mr. Knaggs, at Penbroke Technical School, turns out quantities of really excellent toys on sound commercial primciples. All these industrise could be enormously increased by the introduction of more capital, and when I reflect, spasking for the doll factory alone, on how we started with £10, a borrowed room, and no knowledge, and that after exactly two years we can make, and sell, £50 worth of dolls per week, I can only say that, if we allow the Germans to recapiture the toy trade in Ireland, we shall be even bigger fools than we were before the war.

Though somewhat disturbing, the naval affair in the Channel is not without its compensations. It is probable that the German attack was a surprise one made ander the cover of the heavy darkness and fog, and this fact would account for the less of the Queen. That two German destroyers were sunk and the others driven off shows that our destroyers were sunk and the others driven off shows that our destroyers were on the alert, even though the attack, so far as we know, was the first of the kind. Our lesses are one destroyer sunk and one dislosses are one destroyer sunk and one dis-abled. We do not know what the odds were. We may take it that the German flotilla came out from Zeebrugge. The fact that there were ten enemy ships in all suggests that the destroyer force there has been that the destroyer force there has been increased. So far, no big German ship has succeeded in reaching this Belgian port. The destroyers may have got through to Zeebrugge from the North Sea, in parts and made up there. It is also of them, any in parts and made up there. It is also possible that the German destroyers and sabmarines that have their base at Zeebrugge were sent from Germany by canal and river. The Queen, the transport which was sunk, was one of the most familiar and popular boats in the cross-Channel service in days of peace. She belongel to the South-Eastern and Chatham Railway, and ran between Calais and Dover. She was the first turbine-driven steamer to be put on the cross-Channel service. Of the two destroyers, the Nubian is the larger and newer boat. She was built in 1907, and was of 900 tons. The Flirt was an old destroyer. She was built in 1907, and was of 305 tons. The Nubian had won some fame—already in this war.

Nubian had won some fame-already in this war.

A curious rumour is in circulation to the effect that it is possible that the Garman transports known to be preparing in German harbours a few weeks ago were to attempt an invasion of Norway. It is pointed out that Germany is trying to bring about a rupture with Norway in order to rush one of Norway's southern ports, and thus secure a base for operations against England. This may, of course, be correct. There is no limit to what Germany will do if possible, but a rush on a Norwegian port would have to be made in the face of Sir John Jellicoe. Probably he would ask for nothing better.

Lord Robert Cecil's answers in the House of Commons vesterday regarding the visit of Miss Hobhouse to Belgium under German auspices failed to give satisfaction, and efforts are to be made to secure further details. Members of Parliament are anxious to know how this lady get permission from the German Government to travel through Germany and Belgium, and what reasons she advanced for such a course of action. It is to be hoped that the Foreign Office will be abite to give satisfaction, assurances; otherwise it is likely that there will be grave dissatisfaction.

The fruits of Miss Hobhouse's wander-weefully long time in making up his mind, and eventually decided to remain the representative of Cardiff. He was returned, in fact, in the election of January, 1910, only to retire at the election of December in that year. The result of his vacillation was that Mr. Lloyd George decided to stick to the Carnarvon borough, and the liberals lost the seat. There was much feeling among the local Liberals, and Lord Rhondda was accused of selling the pass. Party and personal feeling alike has now passed away as the result of Lord Rhondda's service to the country during the war.

From the latest Rumanian reports it would appear that the evacuation of Constanza in no way was a rout. The retirement was carried out in good order, the Russan warships covering the retreat of the troops, while the greater portion of the stores in the port were destroyed. The latest that the port were destroyed. The fatter of the city, therefore, was a somewhat barren victory for the enemy, who had counted upon great stores of oil and fain. The Rumanian forces are still in retreat towards Braila, where it is said there are facilities for crossing into Rumania from the Dobrudja. THE FASCINATION AND THE THRILL. THE FASCINATION AND THE THRILL.
It is a weird scene, this silent encampment detached huts, with the hum of the busy eity und about it, and one of the great cemeteries London lying, cold and dark, not far away, at if anybody thinks the women working in the places are in fear of thein lives, he makes worful error. Let nobody be afraid to speak the filling factories, or talk of them as aces not proper-for women. If that were so e should have to put men into them, for their ork is necessary and urgent. But I truly dieve that the sense they give of the war inig actually with us, not far off in a foreign untry, is part of their fascination, their thrill, at their power to attract female workers. He day a delicate-looking elderly lady, accommised by a alight and obviously tenderly-artured girl of sixteen, called at the office of

A BRAVE FELLOWSHIP.

A BRAVE FELLOWSHIP.

The first factory we visit in the western area was formerly a motor factory. Its long garage is now half full of taxis which are lying up, but its workshops are breathlessly busy. They are chiefly occupied with the manufacture of the larger-sized shells, and are especially interesting as showing men and women working together. In a huge shop, which is pulsing and throbbing with machinery, 750 of them are face to face or side by side. It is a stairing sight. The women are generally of larger build than we have seen before, and some of them are superb specimens of virile womanhood. The man are of a big type, too, for the work here wants attempth. As far as one can see, the sexes get on well together. Common interests and common labour seem to have brought them into friendly relations. Constant intercourse at work appears to have given the men a high opinion of women, of their steadiness and power to endure. In like manner, the women seem to have come to a good understanding of the men, their helpfulness and unselfishness shen at work It looks like a brave fellowship, a fine comaradevic, and one hopes that long after the war it may continue to be a living reality. And let nobody suppose that to these men these women will be less desirable as wives because they have worked by their sides in soiled overalls, with oily hands and even blackened faces. In an immortal passage an lold Roman writer tells of how the wives of the men who built up the Roman greatness ground hould have to put men into them, for their is necessary and urgent. But I truly we that the sense they give of the war actually with us, not far off in a foreign try, is part of their fascination, their thrill, their fower to attract female workers day a delicate-looking elderly lady, accommed by a slight and obviously tenderly-dured girl of sixteen, called at the office of ling factory, and asked to see the manager, is lost both my sons in the war," she, "and now I bring you my daughter, is all I have left for my country."

Defing Big THINGS.

Be have a long drive to our next place of but the scene at the end is worth the ney. It is a factory for the making of wooden bexes that carry the shells to the late. All the joiners are girls. They are king the hand-saw, the circular saw, the l-plane, the machine-plane, and are laiding and hammering the boxes into shape, splicing up their thick rope handles. Never there a brighter scene. The girls seem to a sense of doing big things with a blow a swing—not tinkering with femining. They love their work. It is said that long ago a theatrical company, playing a er foolish revue, came to a neighbouring tre, and some of the ladies of the chorus are rest satisfied for one moment unless war can rest satisfied on the conduct of the justice of this comment unless war can rest satisfied for one moment unless war can rest satisfied on the conduct of the justice of this by sweaty or thirty yards at La Boulle was monotonous, he says, and he recollects that Dauge used to take an iron club at a hole of about 250 yards at Chantilly for fear of going too far. Mitchell has undoubtedly developed his driving since leaving the amateur ranks, great as were the distances he obtained then.

Not long ago Mitchell was reported to have made a tee shot of 385 yards with a carry of 350 yards. That carry seems a little too woonderful to be believed. Possibly the measurements were reckoned from the length of the bole given on the tee box—all too often incorrect. Mitchell has had three or four menths in the Royal Field Arillery, and, if the soldier's life gives all this axtra power to his elbow, he will be hitting the ball hope leasy out of sight by the time when he comes back to a civil carser.

It does not appear to be generally known (says the News of the World) that in November, 1915, the famous goilers, Ray, the exception, sought to attest under the Darby scheme, but was rejected as physically unfit. Last month he was called for restantiant before a Medical Board at Bedford. A very fine series of Italian War Pictures, under the patronage of the Italian Consul and General Sir John Maxwell, will be shown at matinées in the Theater Royal during the week commencing November 6th. These films vividly portray the enormous difficulties which had to be overcome in the Italian advance, among the peaks of the Dolomites and the Thyrol, of the transport, which requires eight men to keep one fighting unit in the field, and of the way in which the Italians have been compelled to construct 2,000 miles of reads, meetly up the mountain sides, since they came into the war. The new film shows that the Italian troops crawl to rettory up the sides of the mountains; wade through rushing mountain torrents of meltod snow; build their trenches up round them where the solid rock will not yield to boring; and hurl themselves on the enemy down precipitous slopes. In addition, there will be shown the great historic film, "The Independence of Belgium." The booking opens on Monday next.

of the matinée in aid of the Seldiers' and Sailers' Help Society, as which the farnous thought-pader, Mr. Aired Capper, will appear, at the Theatre Royal on November 20th, promises to be a very great success. Mr. Capper, who has appeared before most of the crowned heads of Europe, is a distinct draw, as nothing like his performance has taken place in Dublin in recent years. The entertainment is under the auspices of a very influential committee, and under the patronage of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland and Lady Mayoress of Dublin, General the Right Hon. Sir John G.
